OPEN-MINDEDNESS

I believe open-mindedness is a necessary trait for 21st Century students and teachers. Why - because students wiil need to pivot constantly to keep up with an ever-changing world and teachers will need to co-create with superior skills, knowledge and understanding.

Ensuring that our students have the skills in order to pivot quickly and look from another perspective when they need will stand them in good stead. Having teachers who can be the guide on the side gives students the confidence to participate and succeed.

That's why the critical and creative thinking elements of our curriculum are essential.

Embedding them daily into practise means that they become second nature .

Having a strong sense of self reinforces the ability to look from another perspective whilst respecting self and colleagues. It means that students can listen, respond and develop constantly whilst respecting the perspectives of others. They can question respectfully whilst developing understandings.

The General Capabilities element of our curriculum allows for this growth and ensures the subject areas are providing the associated skills necessary for success. They are an overlay across and within the subject areas.

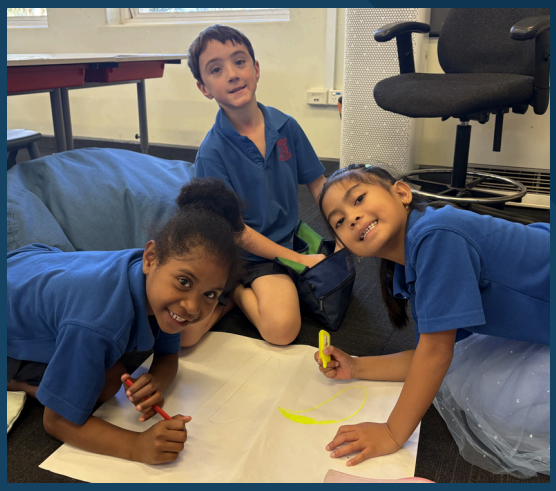

The third element of the curriculum that develops open-mindedness are the cross-curricular elements of Aboriginal Culture, our connections to Asia and sustainability.

Our curriculum is setting students and teachers up for success when it comes to open-mindedness.

Have a lovely week.

KEEPING OUR COMMUNITY WELL

Supporting student health and wellbeing is a priority for our school, especially during influenza season. Good health supports students' learning, engagement, and attendance.

Simple steps such as influenza vaccination, staying home when unwell and practising good hygiene help reduce the spread of illness and protect our wider school community.

Together, we can minimise the impact of seasonal illness on students learning and wellbeing. Thank you for helping maintain a healthy learning environment for all students.
